Q1 What agency do you represent?

Best Friends Animal Society

Q2 What County is your agency located within?

National Organization

Q3 Does your agency take in owner surrender animals?

Other (please specify):

Not at our sanctuary, but we work directly with those shelters who do across the nation and guide them through best practices based on experience and research

Q4 If so, do you only do it at specific times? Please explain.

Here's how it works: Non-emergency owner relinquishments are scheduled by appointment, for a day in the near future in order to help manage flow (typically 1-2 weeks out). This allows time for you to help the owner rehome their pet or troubleshoot the issue to keep the pet in the home. Emergency surrenders can still take place on demand, and stray turn-ins are not affected. Depending on the shelter, owners are informed that their surrendered pets might be killed if they are not adopted. Owners are also provided with other resources, like lists of local rescue organizations and step-by-step advice on re-homing the pet themselves. Most importantly, for those people who believe they have no control over a pet surrender situation, knowledgeable shelter staff helps them address the issues triggering the surrender. More often than not, the reason given for surrendering a pet is an unwanted behavior or a seemingly insurmountable financial problem that can be solved with available community resources. There are some interesting case studies of communities that have instituted managed admission policies. Each recounts similar anxiety and fears expressed in the public response to changes, such as accusations of shelters turning their backs on the public, animals being dumped on the streets or surrendered to neighboring jurisdictions as found strays, etc. None of those fears actually came to pass and each community reports that the new policy has helped save more lives and manage their shelter more effectively.
